

Something up here

But also down here :)

Video?

Interactive maps?

We can embed 3D models!

...and place something next to them by adding it in the compendium PDF
:)

Like for instance this text Chatgpt wrote about the gargoyle shown here:

This evocative sculpture portrays a gargoyle in a quiet, contemplative moment, as it finds itself blanketed by an unexpected fall of snow. Traditionally regarded as guardians or protectors, gargoyles often evoke a sense of strength and vigilance, watching over their surroundings with unblinking eyes. Yet here, in this piece, that very symbolism is gently softened, as the ancient figure is subtly transformed by the delicate touch of winter's embrace.

The snow, which coats the gargoyle's weathered stone surface, serves as a metaphor for the passage of time. Each flake that settles upon its intricately carved details seems to momentarily obscure its form, blurring the sharp edges and deep grooves of its features. The cold, white layer contrasts with the rough, grey texture of the stone, creating an interplay between fragility and endurance. The gargoyle, which would typically evoke an air of watchfulness and strength, now appears quiet and still, as though frozen in a moment of introspection.

Despite being cloaked in snow, the figure's posture remains unwavering. Its stance—strong, deliberate, and fixed—conveys an unspoken resilience. Though nature has enveloped it in a peaceful, cold stillness, the gargoyle's presence remains powerful, as if it continues to protect, to guard, even in this rare moment of silence. It stands as a reminder of the endurance of both human craftsmanship and the enduring forces of nature.

The soft, powdery snow, with its ephemeral nature, highlights the juxtaposition between the eternal stone and the fleeting weather. The sculpture captures not only the stillness of winter but the eternal cycle of change—where even the most steadfast figures can be momentarily softened by the forces of nature. This quiet, transformative...

